Young Mrs. Bobbie Burnside cannot stand it to have her husband threaten her with a monkey wrench. He shot She decided the time had come Sun-flourishing a monkey wrench and said he intended to use it on her if she didn't let him take the car.

When her husband, Ellis R. Burnside, was arraigned yesterday in West Side police court, charged with the theft of his wife's car, Mrs. Burnside explained all this, exhibited the stump of the little finger of her right hand and declared that although her husband had a large income he spent it on other women and she had to pawn her jewelry when she needed money. She was sure, she said, that he wanted her automobile Sunday night to take a

That was why she went to the police, she said, and had her husband arested when he finally returned. She didn't know what she was letting Ellis in for when she called the police, though; if she had, she might even have overlooked the monkey wrench.

She and her husband both found out in the police court when George Baron and Edward Norwood, agents of the Treasury Department, stepped up and informed Magistrate Frothingham they had been hunting Ellis for months at we and ashore. Coast Guard cutters and submarine chasers of the prohibition navy had come within an ace of overhauling him several times, they said, but each time Ellis's yacht had shown them its heels.

They suspected him of being the land high admiral of a fleet of whisky running craft plying between this country and the Bahamas, they said, but had never been able to meet him eye to eye until they found that he had been arrested on his wife's complaint. They asserted that he had made at last $1,000,000 in the contraband traffa and added that their observations of them to believe he had spent it was held by Magistrate Frothingham in West Side Court in bail of $5,000 yesterday afternoon. He was arraigned on a charge of burglary.

At this, Mrs. Burnside barely suppressed a shriek and showed symptoms of being about to faint. She retained of being about to faint. She retained consciousness, however, and in response to questions put by the Treasury agents, she said she had made several trips to the Bahamas with her husband. They were just vacation trips, she said. She and her husband were natives of the Bahamas, she said, and it was natural they should go there a their vactions. She said she between the husband to be in the spice aginess.

Hess, who is eighteen years old and lives at 137 Park Row, was arrested early yesterday in the candy store of John Andressen, 802 Columbus Avenue. The police for the last three weeks have been on the lookout for a burglar specializing in candy stores. Detectives Louis Glasser and William Mornison, of the West 110th Street station, were assigned to look for the "Candy Kid" and they say they found him at work in Andressen's shop.

The burglar is said to have put up a fight when caught in the store. Glasser, with whom he was struggling, observed the youthfulness of the intruder and did not shoot, although he had his gun has hand. Hess, the detectives said, has clubbed into submission and them made a full confession of his misdeeds in the burnt sugar industry.

their success in learning that the "prince" had at various times been a chef, a dishwasher, and a mechanic, and had passed himself off as "Dr. Van Buren, descendant of the President, you know," as Reginald Vanderwere, nephew of John Jacob Astor, and as the adopted son of John D. Rockefeller. Cannon was arrested after it had been found that he fitted the description given by a pawnbroker in business at Columbus Avenue and Fiftyninth Street of the man who had brought him $500 worth of jewelry stolen from Miss Blanche Brooks, of 320 West Ninety-aixth Street, on the evening of September 1. He had already been suspected by the girl's sister, Florence. He had been a friend of the younger girl for some time.

After he had been taken to the West 100th Street Station by Detectives Morrison and Glasser he was identified by the gawnbroker. He denied any knowledge of the robbery.
